

April 9, 2003

06-4219338
AMS

Via Facsimile (202-720-2166)
& U.S. Mail

The Honorable Ann Veneman
United States Department of Agriculture
14th Street & Independence Avenue, SW
Washington, D.C. 20250

Re: Comments on Guidelines for Voluntary Country of Origin Labeling Program

Dear Secretary Veneman:

I am writing on behalf of Safeway Inc. to provide comments on the U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA's) "Guidelines for the Interim Voluntary Country of Origin Labeling of Beef, Lamb, Pork, Fish, Perishable Agricultural Commodities, and Peanuts" (hereinafter Voluntary COL Guidelines). Safeway is one of the largest food and drug retailers in North America. We operate nearly 1,700 continuing stores in the Western, Southwestern, Rocky Mountain and Mid-Atlantic regions of the United States and in western Canada.

Safeway has a long history of supporting voluntary country of origin labeling programs. Examples include: Idaho potatoes, Norwegian smoked salmon, New Zealand lamb, Danish pork back ribs, among others. We have not supported mandatory labeling for numerous reasons, such as the significant additional costs resulting from the extensive record keeping and verifiable segregation requirements.

Although we appreciate the USDA's efforts in fulfilling the Congressional mandate to provide Voluntary COL Guidelines, we are concerned that the current proposal does not represent an equitable and workable system. Our concerns are compounded by the fact that our participation in the voluntary program would require complying with all provisions of the guidelines. This is unreasonable because the information required is not currently available for a significant number of commodities included in the guidelines.

As the USDA develops the proposed and final regulations, we urge it to consider the following issues:

- Clear recognition of overall food chain responsibilities:

The law requires retailers to provide consumers with information that retailers can only obtain from their suppliers. Given this fact, the law also holds suppliers accountable for providing information to retailers.

USDA's Voluntary COL Guidelines properly recognize that the entire food chain must bear responsibility for a country of origin labeling program if consumers are to receive accurate country of origin information as Congress defined it. In furtherance of this principle, the Voluntary COL Guidelines state that producers, growers, handlers, packers, processors and importers must maintain auditable records documenting the origin of covered commodities and that these persons must make country of origin information available to retailers. USDA's regulations must also recognize the obligations that these parties share and must further hold them accountable through stringent enforcement measures to ensure that retailers have accurate information to provide to consumers.

- Flexible Methods of Country of Origin Notification:

The statute allows country of origin information to be provided by means of a "label, stamp, mark, placard or other clear and visible sign on the covered commodity or on the package, display, holding unit, or bin containing the commodity at the final point of sale to consumers." The Guidelines generally follow the statute and further provide that the information must be "conspicuous," and either typed, printed or handwritten.

We urge the Secretary to maintain flexibility regarding the ways in which we satisfy our statutory obligation to inform consumers of the country of origin of covered commodities. Furthermore, USDA should expressly recognize that country of origin information can be considered "conspicuous" even if it is a label placed on the back of a random weight package. The country of origin declaration for hamburger as explained in the Voluntary COL Guidelines could cover a substantial amount of the product if it was required to appear on the front of the package with all of the other federally mandated labeling. (Some counties limit the amount of package surface that may be covered to avoid concealing products from consumers.) Accordingly, provided that the information is presented to consumers in a manner in which they can readily find it, the information should be considered conspicuous and our obligation met. Indeed, since the statute can be satisfied by providing a sign at the store, to the extent that the information is affixed any where on the package, it will be available to the consumer for a greater period of time.

- Reasonable recordkeeping:

The Voluntary COL Guidelines require every person engaged in the business of supplying a covered commodity for retail sale to keep records on the country of origin of the covered commodity for two years. Basic records must be kept at store level; contracts and other more detailed records may be kept at warehouses or corporate headquarters.

Retailers should not be required to keep two years worth of records for covered commodities. Most covered commodities will be sold and consumed well before two years has elapsed, thus retaining records for this period of time at the retail level will serve no useful purpose while incurring substantial cost.

Records required should be reasonable. Retailers have no control over the country of origin determination, which must be made well before the food product reaches the retail grocer's control. Accordingly, the records retailers are required to keep must only connect the covered commodity to those who made the country of origin determination.

- Recognition of food service aspects of grocery stores:

In keeping with the current state of the industry, Safeway provides a variety of options for satisfying consumer demands. In addition to the customary grocery sections, such as produce, meat and general grocery, Safeway offers consumers prepared foods at delis, salad bars, through catering, and other venues.

The Guidelines state that the term "food service establishment" includes salad bars, delis and other prepared food enterprises that provide ready-to-eat foods that are consumed either on or outside of the retailer's premises. We urge USDA to continue to recognize that foods provided from these venues within the retail store are properly considered subject to the statute's exemption from country of origin labeling for food service establishments. Trays of cut vegetables from our catering operations, fruit salad sold at delis or throughout the store, and foods provided at our salad bars are all prepared at food service.

- "Final point of sale" should be receipt for Internet sales:

The statute requires retailers to provide consumers with country of origin information on covered commodities at the final point of retail sale. In the Voluntary COL Guidelines, USDA interprets this to require the retailer to provide country of origin information on the sale vehicle, such as the Internet site. The basis for this is the "Agency's belief that consumers must be made aware of the country of origin of the covered commodity before the purchase is made."

This approach is not required by law and would literally require us to overhaul our entire electronic food delivery system. Specifically, we fulfill consumers internet orders by having "shoppers" at our individual retail grocery stores select the items that were ordered electronically by the consumer. Different retail stores will have covered commodities with different country of origin declarations. For example, we may have strawberries from four different countries (e.g., U.S., Chile, Canada and Venezuela) at our warehouse that will get distributed to several hundred different stores. The scenario could be repeated for bananas, grapes, tomatoes and most of the other perishable produce that we offer to consumers, not to mention the meat and seafood products. Even if we told consumers what all of the possible options for each covered commodity were based on what was available through our distribution center at any one time – a situation that changes on a daily basis – and allowed the consumer to choose, the choices would not reflect what was at the individual stores that would be shopped for the individual consumer.

Accordingly, for purposes of remote sales, retailers should be allowed to satisfy their obligation to inform consumers of the country of origin of covered commodities by providing information to the consumer at the time the food is delivered to the consumer.

- Reasonable enforcement standards:

Retailers are subject to penalties of up to $10,000 per "willful" violation of the statute. USDA's regulations should recognize this standard in two important respects.

First, USDA should recognize that if the majority of individual covered commodity items bear a label indicating the product's country of origin, the retailer has met the statute's requirement to inform the consumer of the country of origin of that covered commodity. For example, one efficient way to ensure that consumers receive accurate country of origin information on some covered commodities, such as produce, is for suppliers to sticker the individual items with country of origin information. However, given the nature of some items as well as adhesive efficacy or actions by customers, not all covered commodities will be stickered.

For example, suppliers currently apply one or two stickers to a hand of bananas that may be comprised of six or seven individual bananas. Consumers frequently separate individual bananas from the "hands" in which they were shipped so that not all hands will be labeled throughout the display, even if the supplier labeled each hand when they were shipped. Similarly, although the technology for label adhesives has improved, no label adhesive is effective 100% of the time. Therefore, USDA should recognize that, if the majority of covered commodity items on display bears country of origin labels, the retailer has met its obligation to inform the consumer of the country of origin of the covered commodity and has not willfully violated the statute, even if some covered commodities in the display do not bear a label.

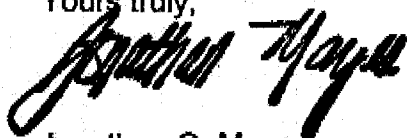

Second, USDA should expressly recognize in the regulations and the preamble some circumstances under which retailers will not be considered to have violated the statute willfully. For example, USDA should state that the Agency will not conclude that a retailer has willfully violated the statute for providing inaccurate country of origin information for a covered commodity if the retailer has the results of an audit that the covered commodity supplier obtained from USDA (under the voluntary, user fee-based program proposed in the Voluntary COL Guidelines) or another third party that demonstrates that the supplier has a system for determining country of origin upon which the retailer may reasonably rely.

- Prompt issuance of regulations:

Finally, we urge USDA to conduct the rulemaking promptly and efficiently. Section 285 of the statute states that the provision "shall apply to the retail sale of a covered commodity beginning September 30, 2004." Since we are required to set up significant systems to obtain the necessary information from our suppliers, to provide the information to consumers, and then to retain the information, we must know what those systems must accommodate as quickly as possible.

We appreciate your attention to our concerns and urge you to develop the regulations as expeditiously as possible.

Yours truly,

Jonathan O. Mayes
Vice President, Government Relations
Safeway Inc.

c: Food Marketing Institute